In the 19th century, it was a time of big changes in Paris: serious change in social connections, morals, mind states, but also architecture, aspiring to be renewed and women wanted to work and manage their own money. But all this became possible thanks to the birth of the department stores. With an Art Nouveau architectural style, the glass, iron, and cement were honored in lavish decorations that attract as many customers as museums or palaces attract daily visitors. With the creation of Aristide Boucicaut's store "Au Bon Marché" in 1852, the notion of shopping arrived in France.
